What's New at Boulder County Nonprofits?

It’s estimated that out of the 360,000 residents in Boulder and Broomfield Counties, more than 60,000 have some form of mental illness. Mental Health Partners serves about 35,000 people every year. Donors to The Community Foundation visited Mental Health Partners to learn how the organization continues to serve the growing needs of both counties. Our group learned that in addition to counseling, substance abuse treatment and other traditional mental health services, Mental Health Partners embarks on integrated, “whole person” care: dental services and primary physical care, for instance. They have a new wellness center, renamed the Ryan Wellness Center after retired CEO, Barbara Ryan. There are also art classes, a commercial-style kitchen called Chinook Cooks for burgeoning cooks, and a computer center for other job skills training. Learn more about our visit.
